

ISLAM AND THE SOURCES OF COMPLETE MORALITY

Dr. HM Azhar Usama

Assistant Professor, Department of Islamic Studies, the University of Lahore, Lahore, Punjab, Pakistan

muhammad.azhar@ais.uol.edu.pk

ABSTRACT

This research paper, Islam and the sources of complete morality, presents as a research review and the resulting implications and results are described in a research style. The research style of this paper will be narrative. From a literature review, it is known that the moral sense of every human being has been entrusted by the Creator of the universe by nature, on the basis of which he knows the difference between good and bad on one hand and wants to adopt on the other hand. good However, this ability exists in man potentially, not actually. Certain requirements have to be met to give it a shape, grow it and make it work. For this purpose, he needs to work hard in a special way. The same is the case here. The purpose of all the teachings of Islam is to refine this hidden virtue and to bring man to a higher level of morality where he can become a figure of mercy and grace, compassion and beneficence and goodness for the whole universe. Be free and on the other hand you can attain eternal bliss by attaining the pleasure and pleasure of Allah. Islam has used two means in particular to bring man to this destination. In this research paper, all the things that comprise human habits and morals will be discussed which will be useful for the readers.